1. Parked at the Staaken (N 53/Z 65) airfield were ground attack planes, the leading edges of whose rudder assemblies were red. These planes differed from aircraft of this type previously observed in that their cockpits seemed to be slightly shorter and the gun was mounted in such a manner that it appeared to move together with the window of the cockpit. While the planes were in the air it was definitely observed that all of the ground attack planes had one-section landing flaps. *

Comment. The alterations in the cockpit are reported for the first time. The ground attack regiment in Staaken is equipped with IL-10s and has in addition some IL-2s for training purposes.
